Overview

Alex is an associate in our insurance practice group. His experience spans private practice, government service, and corporate environments, providing him with a well-rounded perspective on complex legal and business challenges. Prior to joining Meagher + Geer, Alex worked in international corporate tax advisory, where he supported multinational clients on cross-border planning, compliance, and risk management strategies.

He brings hands-on litigation experience, including substantive legal research and drafting, and has supported all phases of case development across a range of matters including antitrust, insurance, and corporate law. In addition, Alex leverages a strong analytical foundation from his prior experience as a business analyst, where he utilized advanced data analytics tools to generate strategic insights and inform decision-making.

Alex earned his J.D. from Loyola University Chicago School of Law, following his completion of an M.B.A. at the University of Nebraska. He previously graduated cum laude from Creighton University's Heider College of Business with a B.S. degree, majoring in Economics.

Outside the office Alex enjoys cheering on Minnesota's sports teams, fishing, golfing, and spending time with family and friends.
